

Haruki Murakami's An Unrealistic Dreamer tackles about the disastrous calamity that Japan has experienced. From the earthquake's great impact, the enormous tsunami, and the distractive radioactive substance and nuclear attack. Thousands has passed away from this tragic event while some were never to be seen again, Many has lost their home, family, friends, and their will to continue life. It may be easy to restore and buildings, roads, and other material things, but what's difficult is to fix one's ethics and values. Japan has managed to overcome these events, but the history and victims of the past shan't be forgotten.

It is surprising to know that an earthquake can change the speed of time. I never knew that something this amusing of a fact has a much greater impact and horrible consequences to a land. Thousands has lost their lives and were never seen again. Witnessing this tragic event online had given me anxiety and fear. It is traumatizing. Earth is a wonderful place, and its beauty is one of kind, but every beauty comes with chaos. These disasters are inevitable and unpredictable and the only thing we could do is be prepared and hope it won't be as worse as before. Grave of the Fireflies and Barefoot Gen are anime movies that tackles about the tragic events from World War II. Watching this for the first time gave me a hard time to process my feelings. It is painful to watch. The thought of going thru the pain of radioactivity is horrible and it made me hate humanity. Innocent people were killed, and many has suffered. With the unfortunate consequences of radioactivity, it is still a debate on whether to use nuclear energy or not. With that, the ghost of the past is something that we shall not forget.
